SPREADING SMALL-POX.

CURIOUS ACTION OF A CHARLES. TOWN FUMIGATOR. [From the Boston Advertiser, Nov. 4.] One of the greatest and most peculiar sensations which Charlestown has known for a long time, occurred in that city yes-terday. John M. Sylvester, a man emterday. John M. Sylvester, a man employed by the city to fumigate houses where the small-pox exists and to take care of patients, was tending a man named Grenville Hopkins, who was afficted with the small-pox in its worst form at No. 218, Main street. Yesterday morning, before daylight, the man in a lit of insanity expressed a desire to take a walk. Sylvester thought the request not an unreasonable one, and wrapping him in a sheet, took him into the streets barefooted and nude, with the ex-ception of the slight covering, the time being five o'clock in the morning, and the air at nearly freezing point. The first place he entered was a stable, where the hostlers were about thier morning work. To their excited imaginations the pair seemed a sheeted spectre and an attendant fiend, and they were naturally thrown into a great fright. Some hid in the hayloft and said not a word, while others ran, shouting at the top of their voices. They leisurely made the tour of three stables, affrighting all the men there employed in a similar man-ner. The weird pair promenaded through Main, Miller and Lawrence streets, scar-Main, Miller and Lawrence atreets, scaring all persons they met. Milkmen on their morning rounds whipped up their horses and drove off at a break-neck pace, shouting, "Murder! Help!" Sleepers were roused by the disturbance, and windows were thrown up only to be as suddenly slammed down when the unearthly spectacle made its appearance. Special policeman Mich-ael Hughes was standing at the corner of Phipps and Lawrence streets, near the ancient burying ground, when, in the darkness he saw the strange couple about fifty feet from him. They approached him, and he turned to run, but mustering courage, he rallied, and broke forth in characteristic speech: "Stand back! If your are human and come near me, I'll cave both your heads in!" A private watchman at Chevalier's stable inconti-nently fled, crying, "A spook! a spook! protect me!" When last seen, he was going toward Cambridge at the top of his speed. The unfortunate man's absence was discovered by his friends, and he was taken back to the house, where he was placed in charge of a trustworthy man named Joseph Gould. At about 8 o'clock Sylvester stepped into the police station, where Chief of Police Switt and several others were sitting. The affair had meanwhile been reported at the station, and as the fumigator made his appearance there was a vacancy in the room where the officers were sitting, they private office in the rear. The chief's dered the unwelcome intruder to leave instantly, and never darken the doors of the station again. The station was immedistely fumigated, and disinfectants were scattered freely around. Chief Swift promptly discharged Sylvester, and pro-

Reese, who is of good character, and will be faithful to his duty. Sylves-ter was very indignant at the action of the man named

has declared that he intended to make fin fortune out of the thing this season. For this reason he did all he could to spread the disease, and immediately after coming in contact with the most malignant cases, he would stand among crowds and on the sidewalks in the most exposed places. He became a regular bugbear. Citizens would order him to leave their vicinity, and little children would fiee at his approach. He is a man of singular appearance. He has long, black, snaky hair, and a stooped, crooked figure. He boasts that he has not washed himself for twenty years, and the dirt stands incrusted on the back of his neck to a considerable depth. As the disease eems to be on the increase, such a case as
